

Brand Loyalty Diligence: D2C Fashion

Private Equity

Background

CLIENT, a Private Equity firm, was looking for a quick-turn market assessment of brand strength for a fashion influencer. Prior to finalizing a transaction, they were looking to validate key purchasing channels, understand the competitive landscape, and measure the influencer impact of certain events on purchasing decisions.

Approach

- LRC collaborated over 3 weeks on a hybrid quantitative-qualitative panel assessment which was distributed to the target demographic: female, between the ages of 30 and 50 years old.
 - Quantified the impact of media awareness and key influencer events on likelihood to purchase and brand loyalty through an experience evaluation.

Results

- LRC established key distribution channels by customer segment – in particular, department stores saw the strongest growth and highest brand loyalty, while consumers who preferred e-commerce sites had the least.
- Validated that media awareness helps drives sales indicating a strong opportunity for growth.
